

The Apache Railway (reporting marks, APA) is a shortline operation based out of Snowflake, Arizona and operates over 30 miles of track between Holbrook, Arizona (location of a paper mill) to Snowflake. The Apache has been in operation for more than 90 years now and continues to haul traffic over much of the same trackage as when it started in 1917. Over the years the railroad has been owned by a number of different companies and at its peaked featured a system stretching over 70 miles. For many years the Apache transported a variety of timber-related products and was widely regarded in the railfan community for its use of venerable American Locomotive Company (Alco) diesel locomotives, notably C420 and C424 models.
